

North Sets Courses in Education

Four education courses will be offered by University of California Extension on Wednesdays at North High beginning Sept. 27.

"Methods of Teaching Mentally Retarded Children," meeting from 7 to 10 p.m., will be taught by Dr. Robert Wakefield.

An examination of research in reading, spelling, and oral and written language will be provided participants in "Teaching Language Arts in Elementary Schools," scheduled to meet from 7 to 9:45 p.m. Instructor Enid Fremdling, coordinator of teacher training, University Elementary School, will emphasize the newly adopted state text.

Meeting from 4 to 6:45 p.m., "Outdoor Science in Elementary Schools" will probe interrelationships of the physical and life sciences through a study of natural history. The course will provide a background of information and techniques for elementary teachers, according to Robert Fisher, noted leader in the field and instructor for the class.

"The Nursery School Curriculum, Part I" set to meet from 8 to 8:45 p.m., will be taught by Thelma Clark. The course may be applied toward the University Extension Core Certificate Program.

Law in Action

The Constitution says the accused may remain silent. At his trial he need not testify against himself. No district attorney can call him to the stand and question him.

For years the district attorney or the judge could comment on the accused's failure to testify. When a prosecutor offered evidence against a defendant, the judge himself could tell the jury to take into account the defendant's failure to take the stand and reply.

The Supreme Court has recently ruled that such comment violated the rule against self incrimination. There are many reasons besides guilt for a person not to testify. He may be very nervous. He may have a hard time explaining suspicious, but really innocent facts. He may speak poorly. He may be a poor witness. The court, therefore, said that no judge could comment on a person's failure to testify. He may not translate an accused's silence into evidence. This would violate the defendant's constitutional right.

UNDER OUR LAW the prosecutor must prove its case against the accused beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty. If the district attorney cannot present such a case, the defendant may go free. The defendant has no duty to prove the case against himself by testifying.

Some special laws call upon you to keep records. For example, taxpayers must keep business records which the government can examine even though they are incriminating.

Those caught with narcotics face conviction unless they can explain that they are rightfully in possession of such items. In some cases, possession alone is a crime.

IN ANOTHER recent case Zeke Moonshine was caught at the site of an illegal liquor still. A federal law says that the court can convict a person in Zeke's position unless he explains his presence. Zeke failed to do this and was convicted. The Supreme Court upheld his conviction.

The law protects one's right to remain silent when the police question him as well as at his trial. The police must warn suspects that they can remain silent, and also that they can have an attorney present to advise them. Failure to inform the accused of these things can block the use of confessions or incriminating statements at the trial. Notes: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.
